

I hope that the FCC supports any Do-Not-Call registry and aggressively enforces them.

To put it bluntly, why should a telemarketer have the right to disturb my sleep by calling me while I'm napping or sleeping because I work the night shift? My home should be free from disturbances if I so choose.

I pay for my home phone service so that I can communicate with family, friends, and businesses of my choosing. I do not appreciate my phone, which I pay for, being used as a pathway to interrupt the peace in my house. If I choose to keep unsolicited marketing from ringing my phone, then I want the FCC to support my decision. I can think of no reason why a telemarketer should have the right to cause the phone in my house to ring if I don't want it to. It invades my right to peace & quiet in my own home. I could turn off the ringer, but that also shuts out people I care about.

Never have I agreed to or purchased anything or any service which was pitched to me over the phone. Actually, all I hear about is the negative impact of telemarketing. Either it is disruptive to the household, or someone is using telemarketing to prey on elderly or otherwise unsavvy people to get their money.

Please, please, please look at every Do-Not-Call registry in the US as a petition signed by the registrants saying, "we're tired of and will not tolerate telemarketing in my home any more."

Please support and uphold every Do-Not-Call list, no matter how restrictive to business. Businesses are not what this country is about, it's about us, the citizens. We want our peace and quiet in our homes!!!
